

If Bush Were Popular, We Wouldn't Need Polls to Convince Us

Sunday, 24 February 2008 14:31 -

If 67 percent of the population agreed about something, you'd think we'd all know it. We wouldn't need polls to inform us two out of three people are of one mind. We could just walk down the street, make eye contact and nod, or maybe throw each other that two-handed finger point that says "Hey, bud, I'm with you." More...
