

A gay teenager who pulled a stun gun on students he said bullied him has been expelled from his Indianapolis high school until January.

Darnell "Dynasty" Young's mother sent her 17-year-old son to school with a stun gun because, she said, administrators didn't do enough to stop the bullying against him.

His mother, Chelisa Grimes, sent her son to school with the stun gun after he said he was taunted and bullied for months.

After six other students surrounded him at school on April 16, calling him names and threatening to beat him up, Young pulled the stun gun from his backpack. He raised it in the air, setting off an electric charge, and sending the group scurrying, Young said.

TVNL Comment: They school should have expelled the bullies. Lesson learned...next time use a gun. And after you are done use it on the idiots who suspended you for protecting yourself. At least the problem would be solved. No room on this planet for bullies. Bullies grow up to be bigger bullies. Idiocy is the dominant trait of athority these days.
