

As the Obama government gets ready to raise a protectionist wall against offshoring, the US firms seem to be shipping more jobs to India.

The US firms have offshored 22,000 green technology jobs to India since January 1, 2009, Doug Brown, co-author of the influential 2009 Green Outsourcing Report, informed TNIE.

Noting an interesting irony the authors of the report say, "In the US, green stimulus plan is creating low-wage installation and construction jobs." But, in India, which is usually associated with cheap and low-skill work, "...New green jobs include higher dollar engineers, strategic business management and support technicians charged with designing innovative environmental friendly solutions," they add.
