

The current health care reform debate in Washington is really just a distraction -- a ploy to keep everyone focused on all the wrong topics while quietly refusing to talk about the big issues that threaten the health of an entire nation.

1. Ending the FDA's suppression of natural cures and safe, effective nutritional supplements.
2. Initiating a real investment in public education to teach people about how to prevent disease with nutrition.
3. Ending Big Pharma's monopoly on drug prices and drug patents (not to mention patents on human genes and animals).
4. Restoring the ability for local doctors to practice local medicine without being controlled from bureaucrats in Washington.
5. Cracking down on junk food advertising, soda advertising and pharmaceutical ads that convince people to purchase products that will only harm them.
6. Banning dangerous chemical ingredients that cause diseases in the first place (aspartame, MSG, sodium nitrite, etc.)
7. A real effort to improve school lunches and serve food that's nutritious instead of food that's cheap and convenient.
8. Ending bizarre food subsidies on crops like corn that end up making high-fructose corn syrup the cheapest sweetener for manufacturers to use.
9. Affirming health freedom for parents who wish to opt out of the current system of forced vaccinations and gunpoint-enforced chemotherapy.
10. Requiring honest food labeling where irradiated and GMO foods are clearly labeled as such.
