

Current advice from the Department of Health had said that research showed mobile phone use “affects brain activity”, although it conceded there were “significant gaps in our scientific knowledge”.

But a draft of a new advisory leaflet for parents now makes clear that precautions need not be taken when it comes to children.

More...