

LeBron James knows a thing or two about athletes, and as a former All-State wide receiver, he knows a thing or two about quarterbacks. The King talked to ESPN's Dave McMenamin and let it be known that he thinks the NFL is screwing over the former Pro-Bowler.

"I love football, but I'm not part of the NFL," James told ESPN following the Cleveland Cavaliers' practice Sunday. "I don't represent the NFL. I don't know their rules and regulations. But I do know Kap is getting a wrong doing. I do know that. Just watching, he's an NFL player. He's an NFL player and you see all these other quarterbacks out there and players out there that get all these second and third chances that are nowhere near as talented as him. It just feels like he's been blackballed out of the NFL. So, I definitely do not respect that."
