

The gullible Americans, who take things at face value, still believe their new president represents a real change, a challenge to the status quo, while the more sophisticated Europeans are quick to pick up on Obama's inconsistencies – made all the more glaring by his habit of pairing two mutually contradictory stances on the same issue.

More...