

Concerns about foreign spies and terrorists have prompted the Homeland Security Department to set up its own counterintelligence division.

The new directive comes as the federal government increases its counterspy efforts across all agencies and raises the awareness of intelligence vulnerabilities in the private industry as well as in protecting government secrets.

More...